Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED

94 378 AUG 29 1994

OFFICE OF THE CLERK

No. _____

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States
OCTOBER TERM, 1994

JOHN L. MARSILIO
Petitioner,

v.

CONSOLIDATED RAIL CORPORATION,
Respondent.

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

---

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

EMIL R. DINARDO
JOSEPH DINARDO, P.C.
267 North Street
Buffalo, NY 14201-1396
(716) 883-2212

LAWRENCE M. MANN *
STEVEN M. WEISBAUM
ALPER & MANN, P.C.
400 N. Capitol Street, N.W.
Suite 851
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 298-9191

Counsel for Petitioner

* Counsel of Record

August 29, 1994

WILSON - EPES PRINTING CO., INC. - 789-0096 - WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

29 pp

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether state railroad safety walkway regulations are preempted by the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, 49 U.S.C. § 20101 *et seq. or the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C. § 51 et seq.

---

* Formerly 45 U.S.C. § 431, et seq., codified by Pub.L. 103-272, July 5, 1994, at 49 U.S.C. § 20101 et seq.

LIST OF ALL PARTIES

The following parties appeared before the Court of Appeals:

Plaintiff-Appellant: John L. Marsilio

Defendant-Appellee: Consolidated Rail Corporation

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
QUESTIONS PRESENTED	i
LIST OF ALL PARTIES	ii
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	v
OPINIONS BELOW	1
JURISDICTION	2
STATUTES INVOLVED	2
STATEMENT OF THE CASE	3
REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION	6
I. THERE IS A SPLIT IN THE CIRCUITS REGARDING THE APPLICABILITY OF STATE WALKWAY REGULATIONS IN FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT CLAIMS	6
A. The Ninth Circuit Has Concluded That State Walkway Regulations Are Not Preempted By The Federal Railroad Safety Act Of 1970	7
B. The Fifth Circuit Has Concluded That State Walkway Regulations Are Preempted By The Federal Railroad Safety Act Of 1970	9
C. The Third Circuit Has Concluded That State Walkway Statutes Are Preempted By The Federal Employers' Liability Act, Without Addressing The Federal Railroad Safety Act Of 1970	10
1. The Federal Employers' Liability Act And The Federal Railroad Safety Act Imbue State Safety Statutes With The Same Force And Effect As Federal Railroad Safety Statutes And Regulations	11

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

Page

2. The Supreme Court Reaffirmed The Applicability Of State Safety Regulations In CSX Transp., Inc. v. Easterwood 12

II. THE DECISION BELOW IS CONTRARY TO PRIOR DECISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT 13

A. The Third Circuit Erroneously Affirmed The Lower Court's Reliance On C & O Ry. Co. v. Stapleton 13

B. Established Third Circuit Case Law Permits The Admission Into Evidence Of Safety Regulations Enacted For The Safety Of Employees 14

CONCLUSION 16

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES — Page

C & O Ry. Co. v. Stapleton, 279 U.S. 587 (1929) ..passim
CSX Transportation, Inc. v. Easterwood, —— U.S. ——, 113 S.Ct. 1732, 123 L.Ed.2d 387 (1993) .....passim
Donelon v. New Orleans Terminal Co., 474 F.2d 1108 (5th Cir. 1973) 10
Eckert v. Aliquippa & Southern R. Co., 828 F.2d 183 (3rd Cir. 1987) 15
Kernan v. American Dredging Co., 355 U.S. 426 (1958) 14, 15
Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Railroad Comm'n of Texas, 833 F.2d 570 (5th Cir. 1987) 9, 10
National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners v. Coleman, 542 F.2d 11 (3rd Cir. 1976) 9, 15
Ries v. National Railroad Passenger Corp., 960 F.2d 1156 (3rd Cir. 1992) 14, 15
Rolick v. Collins Pine Co., 975 F.2d 1009 (3rd Cir. 1992) 15
Southern Pacific Transp. v. Public Utilities Comm'n 647 F.Supp. 1220 (N.D.Cal. 1986), aff'd, 820 F.2d 1111 (9th Cir. 1987) (per curiam) 7, 8

STATUTES AND REGULATIONS

Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, 49 U.S.C. § 20101 et seq. i § 20105 ..... 2, 4, 11
§ 20106 ..... passim
Federal Employers Liability Act, 45 U.S.C. §51 et seq. ..... i, 3
§ 53 ..... 2, 11, 15
§ 54 ..... 2, 11
§ 54a ..... passim
49 C.F.R. § 213.37 8
53 Pa. Code § 33.125(b) ..... passim

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

LEGISLATIVE MATERIALS — Page

Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Transp. and Aeronautics of the Comm. on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on H.R. 7068, H.R. 11417, and H.R. 14478, S. 1933, 91st Cong., 2d Sess., Ser. No. 91-15, p. 29 (1970) 7

S. Rep. No. 91-619, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. 8-9 (1969) 7

H.R. Rep. No. 91-1194, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. p. 19 (1970) 7

H.R. Rep. No. 91-1194, 91st Cong., 2d Sess., reprinted in 1970 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 4104 [cited as House Report] 8

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1994

JOHN L. MARSILIO

Petitioner,

v.

CONSOLIDATED RAIL CORPORATION,

Respondent.

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

---

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

John L. Marsilio hereby petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

OPINIONS BELOW

The ruling at issue here, of the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania, is attached hereto (Addendum, hereinafter "Add.", 1a-3a, infra). The orders of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit affirming the judgment of the district court (Add., 4a-5a, infra) and denying the Petition for Rehearing or Suggestion for Rehearing in Banc (Add., 6a, infra).

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania was entered June 14, 1993. The decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit affirming the ruling of the lower court was entered on April 15, 1994. The order of the Third Circuit denying Marsilio's petition for rehearing or suggestion of rehearing in banc was denied on May 31, 1994. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTES INVOLVED

The Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, provides in pertinent part:

> A State may adopt or continue in force any law, rule, regulation, order, or standard relating to railroad safety until such time as the Secretary has adopted a rule, regulation, order, or standard covering the subject matter of such state requirement. A State may adopt or continue in force an additional or more stringent law, rule, regulation, order, or standard relating to railroad safety when necesary to eliminate or reduce an essentially local safety hazard, and when not incompatible with any Federal law, rule, regulation, order, or standard, and when not creating an undue burden on interstate commerce.

49 U.S.C. § 20106.

The Federal Employers' Liability Act provides in pertinent part:

> A regulation, standard, or requirement in force, or prescribed by the Secretary of Transportation under chapter 201 of Title 49, or by a State agency that is participating in investigative and surveillance activities under section 20105 of Title 49, is deemed to be a statute under sections 53 and 54 of this title.

45 U.S.C. § 54a.

The Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission Code provides as follows:

> The space between the tracks ordinarily used by train and yardmen and other employees as a walkway in the discharge of their duties, in the space beside such tracks within eight feet, six inches of the centerline of such tracks, shall be kept in reasonably suitable condition for such purpose.

53 Pa. Code § 33.125(b).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The petitioner, John L. Marsilio, brought this negligence action pursuant the Federal Employers' Liability Act (hereinafter "FELA"), 45 U.S.C. § 51 et seq., for injuries sustained by him in the course of his employment with Consolidated Rail Corporation (hereinafter "Conrail"). At the trial in the district court, the petitioner sought to introduce into evidence section 33.125(b) of the Public Utility Commission Code of Pennsylvania (hereinafter "Pa. Code"), a state safety regulation covering railroad walkways. The district court ruled that the statute was inadmissible based on the Supreme Court case, C & O Ry. Co. v. Stapleton, 279 U.S. 587 (1929), and subsequently the jury rendered a verdict in favor of Conrail.

The court of appeals affirmance of the lower court's exclusion of the state walkway statute throws into turmoil the applicability of the existing body of state walkway regulations throughout the country and contravenes established Supreme Court decisions with respect to the applicability of state safety regulations to the railroad industry. Furthermore, it is in direct conflict with the express language of section 54a of FELA, which provides that all orders, rules, regulations, standards, and requirements in force, or prescribed or issued by any state agency, which is participating in investigative and surveillance activities, shall have the same force and effect as a statute. 45 U.S.C. § 54a.[1]

The record on appeal established that the state regulation in question was enacted for the protection of railroad employees and that, pursuant to 49 U.S.C. § 20105, the State of Pennsylvania was a participant in the Federal Railroad Administration's Safety Program at the time of the incident. The state safety regulation was both relevant and admissible to the appellant's claim pursuant to § 54a of FELA.

The following facts were elicited at the trial:

On March 20, 1990, John L. Marsilio was employed as a car inspector for Conrail at the Conway Yard in Conway, Pennsylvania. Mr. Marsilio was inspecting a train when he stepped out from between two cars and his right leg slipped into a hole in the walkway. Mr. Marsilio lost his balance and fell on the stone ballast twisting his leg and severely injuring his right knee. The visibility was poor as there was no lighting in the area.

During petitioner's case-in-chief, his counsel offered into evidence § 33.125(b) of the Pennsylvania Code on the grounds that the said regulation was "promulgated for the safety of railroad employees," and as such was admissible and relevant. (Add., 2a). Section 33.125(b) of the Pennsylvania Code provides as follows:

> The space between the tracks ordinarily used by train and yardmen and other employees as a walkway in the discharge of their duties, in the space beside such tracks within eight feet, six inches of the

---

[1] 45 U.S.C. § 54a, was formerly part of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (hereinafter "FRSA"), at 45 U.S.C. § 437(c). When Title 45 was codified into Title 49, section 437(c) of the FRSA was made a part of FELA, further evidencing Congress' intent that state walkway regulations be admissible in FELA cases.

> centerline of such tracks, shall be kept in reasonably suitable condition for such purpose.

53 Pa. Code § 33.125(b).

Conrail's attorney objected to such admission on the grounds that "The federal government has preempted the field of railroad safety and anything that the Public Utility Commission has promulgated is certainly no guide, has no standing and it has no effect." (Add., 2a, infra).

The district court concluded that the state safety regulation was inadmissible based on Stapleton. In excluding the state walkway regulation, the court stated as follows:

> THE COURT: I will deny the request. I am basing my decision on an old Supreme Court case, Chesapeake against Ohio Railroad Company—Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company against Stapleton, 279 U.S. 587, 1929. Here, there was a child that was a child that was working for somebody—somebody under the age of 16 was working for the railroad and was injured, and they sued under the F.E.L.A., and the plaintiffs sought to bring in the state statute on child labor law.
>
> The Court said this. By the Federal Employers' Liability Act, Congress took possession of the field of employers liability to employees in interstate transportation by rail and all state laws upon that subject were superseded.
>
> * * * *
>
> The employer is liable for injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence specified in the act, and proof of such negligence is essential to recovery. They were trying to say it was negligence per se since he was under the age of 16.
>
> I think this clearly controls this situation, so I will deny the request.

(Add., 2a-3a).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

I. THERE IS A SPLIT IN THE CIRCUITS REGARDING THE APPLICABILITY OF STATE WALKWAY REGULATIONS IN FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT CLAIMS.

The sole issue in this case is whether, in view of CSX Transp., Inc. v. Easterwood, —— U.S. ——, 113 S.Ct. 1732, 123 L.Ed.2d 387 (1993), state walkway regulations are preempted by the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, 49 U.S.C. § 20101 et seq., or the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C. § 51 et seq. The decision of the Third Circuit, concluding that the state walkway regulation is preempted by FELA, joins the Fifth Circuit in preempting state walkway regulations, and is in direct conflict with the Ninth Circuit holding that state walkway regulations are not preempted by federal law. Although the Fifth and Ninth Circuit decisions did not involve FELA claims, unless preempted, state safety regulations will apply in FELA cases, as discussed infra, at 7-10. Moreover, the opinion of the Third Circuit endorses a method of preemption analysis that is in direct conflict with that used by either the Fifth or Ninth Circuits, and which is contraindicated by the FRSA and the Supreme Court decision of Easterwood.

Pursuant to 49 U.S.C. § 20106, states are permitted to regulate rail safety until such time as the Secretary of Transportation ("Secretary") has adopted rules covering a specific subject matter. Congress expressly reserved authority to the states to regulate certain areas of railroad safety. The language of the FRSA and its legislative history, make clear that Congress did not intend to displace state rail safety law absent the enactment of specific federal regulations covering the same subject matter. The preemption clause of the FRSA states:

> The Congress declares that laws, rules, regulations, orders, and standards relating to railroad safety shall > be nationally uniform to the extent practicable. A state may adopt or continue in force any law, rule, regulation, order, or standard relating to railroad safety until such time as the Secretary has adopted a rule, regulation, order, or standard covering the subject matter of such state requirement. A State may adopt or continue in force an additional or more stringent law, rule, regulation, order, or standard relating to railroad safety when necessary to eliminate or reduce an essentially local safety hazard, and when not incompatible with any Federal law, rule, regulation, order, or standard, and when not creating an undue burden on interstate commerce. (emphasis added).

49 U.S.C. § 20106. See also Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Transp. and Aeronautics of the Comm. on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on H.R. 7068, H.R. 11417, and H.R. 14478, S. 1933, 91st Cong., 2d Sess., Ser. No. 91-15, p. 29 (1970); S. Rep. No. 91-619, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. 8-9 (1969); H.R. Rep. No. 91-1194, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. p. 19 (1970).

The FRA has not issued regulations covering the subject matter of walkways.

A. The Ninth Circuit Has Concluded That State Walkway Regulations Are Not Preempted By The Federal Railroad Safety Act Of 1970.

The Ninth Circuit, in Southern Pacific Transp. v. Public Utilities Comm'n, 647 F. Supp. 1220 (N.D. Cal. 1986), aff'd., 820 F.2d 1111 (9th Cir. 1987) (per curiam), addressed whether a state regulation which, inter alia, required railroads to provide walkways on each side of their tracks, was preempted by federal regulations relating to track support structure. The Ninth Circuit preemption analysis resolved around the interpretation of § 20106, and whether the subject matter of the state regulation was covered by a federal regulation.

The railroad argued in the district court that the state walkway regulations were preempted by federal track safety regulations, which established standards governing the subgrade and ballast on which the tracks were laid. Id., at 1224. The railroad stated that because the state and federal regulations affect the same area of railroad operations, then they cover the same subject matter under § 20106, and thus the state regulations should have been preempted. Id., at 1225.[2]

Judge William Schwarzer pointed out that,

> [T]he legislative history of the FRSA indicates that Congress's primary purpose in enacting that statute was "to promote safety in all areas of railroad operations." H.R. Rep. No. 91-1194, 91st Cong., 2d Sess., reprinted in 1970 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 4104 [cited as House Report]; see also 45 U.S.C.A. § 421 (West). Congress's concern extended to the safety of employees engaged in railroad operation. House Report at 4106. Read in light of that history, § 434 manifests an intent to avoid gaps in safety regulations by allowing state regulation until federal standards are adopted. State and federal regulations therefore cannot be held to cover the same subject matter unless they address the same safety concerns.

Id. The court concluded that "The ballast regulations relied upon by [Southern Pacific] are designed to insure that tracks have adequate support," See 49 C.F.R. § 213.37 (1985), but that "No FRA regulation addresses the concern that employees have a safe working environment near railroad tracks." Id.

---

[2] The railroad submitted evidence that the state walkway requirement would require an extension of the ballast or subgrade, which were covered by federal regulations. Id. at 1224.

The court supported its reading of the § 20106 preemption exception, citing National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners v. Coleman, 542 F.2d 11 (3rd Cir. 1976). The Third Circuit held in that case that only the precise subject matter of the FRA regulations, monthly accident reporting requirements, was beyond a state's regulatory authority.

B. The Fifth Circuit Has Concluded That State Walkway Regulations Are Preempted By The Federal Railroad Safety Act Of 1970.

The decision of Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Railroad Comm'n. of Texas, 833 F.2d 570 (5th Cir. 1987) (hereinafter "MOPAC"), represents the current state of preemption law in the Fifth Circuit. In MOPAC, the court addressed precisely the same matter of state walkway requirements at issue in the Ninth Circuit. The Fifth Circuit preemption analysis, like that of the Ninth Circuit, revolved around the interpretation of § 20106, and whether the subject matter of the state regulation was covered by a federal regulation. The Fifth Circuit specifically rejected the approach used by the Ninth Circuit, however, concluding that "The test of whether both federal and state regulations may operate . . . is whether both regulations can be enforced without impairing the superintendence of the field, not whether they are aimed at similar or different objectives." Id., at 573.

The court relied on the introductory language of § 20106, which directs that "laws, rules, regulations, orders, and standards relating to railroad safety shall be nationally uniform to the extent practicable," and concluded that

> It would be impracticable and inconsistent with this intent, if, assuming walkways are integrally related to track structure and composition, 50 states could establish individual walkway regulations in addition to the FRA standards.

Id.[3] Emphasizing federal uniformity of railroad safety laws, the Fifth Circuit reasoned that,

> If the [state] walkway regulation has [the effect of requiring the railroad to strengthen or enlarge the roadbed beyond the FRA requirements], we hold that the federal regulation has 'covered the subject matter' of track composition and design and that the state regulation conflicts with § [20106]'s purpose to foster national rail safety standards 'to the extent practicable.'

Id. The Fifth Circuit distinguished between "a functionally overlapping state regulation and one not 'covered by the subject matter' of an FRA regulation," and suggested that the FRA may be found to have adopted a regulation covering a subject wherever it is found, after investigation, that a state regulation may functionally overlap with some object or aspect of railroad safety which is covered by an FRA regulation. Id.

C. The Third Circuit Has Concluded That State Walkway Statutes Are Preempted By The Federal Employers' Liability Act, Without Addressing The Federal Railroad Safety Act Of 1970.

The Third Circuit joined the Fifth Circuit in concluding that state walkway regulations are preempted, but in doing so relied on early Supreme Court law to conclude that state safety regulations are preempted by FELA. The district court held that the state safety regulation was inadmissible, based on Stapleton, concluding that "By the Federal Employers' Liability Act, Congress took possession of the field of employers liability to employees in interstate transportation by rail and all state laws upon that subject were superseded." (Add., 3a). The Third Circuit decision to preempt state walkway regulations

---

[3] See also, Donelon v. New Orleans Terminal Co., 474 F.2d 1108, 1112 (5th Cir. 1973) ("The ultimate goal of [§ 20106 of] the Act is to establish nationally uniform control of railroad safety," and that the exceptions in § 20106 provided only a "narrow spectrum of deviation from national uniformity. . . .") throws into turmoil the applicability of the existing body of comparable state walkway regulations throughout the country, and contravenes the express language of both the FELA and the FRSA. More importantly, the analysis endorsed by the Third Circuit is in direct conflict with the preemption analysis outlined by the Easterwood decision.

1. The Federal Employers' Liability Act And The Federal Railroad Safety Act Imbue State Safety Statutes With The Same Force And Effect As Federal Railroad Safety Statutes And Regulations.

Congress enacted the FRSA subsequent to Stapleton, expressly incorporating state safety statutes and regulations as bases for establishing the duties and liabilities of parties in FELA actions. Title 45 U.S.C. § 54a provides:

> A regulation, standard, or requirement in force, or prescribed by the Secretary of Transportation under chapter 201 of Title 49, or by a State agency that is participating in investigative and surveillance activities under section 20105 of Title 49, is deemed to be a statute under sections 53 and 54 of this title.

Title 45 U.S.C. § 53 provides that,

> In all actions . . . brought against any such common carrier by railroad under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this chapter to recover damages for personal injuries to an employee, . . . no such employee who may be injured or killed shall be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury of employees. (emphasis added).

The foregoing statutory language is unambiguous in imparting state safety regulations with the force and effect of federal regulations. The codification of § 54a from the FRSA into FELA further evidences Congress' intent that state safety laws such as § 33.125(b) be admissible in actions brought under FELA. Barring a finding of preemption pursuant to § 20106 of the FRSA, state walkway regulations such as Pennsylvania Code § 33.125(b) have the same force and effect as federal safety regulations.

To the extent that Stapleton is read as prohibiting consideration of any state safety regulations, because they would modify the duties or obligations of employer or employee under the FELA, it is contrary to the express language of the FRSA, which was promulgated subsequent thereto. Furthermore, the interpretation of Stapleton endorsed by the Third Circuit is contrary to the recent Easterwood decision which established the appropriate standard for determining federal preemption.

2. The Supreme Court Recently Reaffirmed The Applicability Of State Safety Regulations In Easterwood.

The Third Circuit's finding of preemption is not in accordance with the Supreme Court decision in Easterwood, which established the standard of review in railroad preemption analysis. Easterwood was the first case in which the Supreme Court interpreted the preemptive scope of § 20106 of the FRSA, by defining the circumstances under which the Secretary is deemed to have issued regulations "covering the subject matter" of state regulations, and thereby preempting the state regulation of the said subject matter.

The Supreme Court referred to the long held notion that, "[i]n the interest of avoiding unintended encroachment on the authority of the States, . . . a court interpreting a federal statute . . . will be reluctant to find preemption," (emphasis added), Id., 113 S.Ct. at 1737, and held that a subject matter is not preempted when the Secretary has issued regulations which merely "touch upon" or "relate to" that subject matter. This Court held that "preemption will lie only if the federal regulations substantially subsume the subject matter of the relevant state law." (emphasis added). Id., at 1738.

While the Third Circuit failed even to consider § 20106 of the FRSA in determining the applicability state walkway regulations, the Fifth and Ninth Circuits analyzed § 20106 of the FRSA but came to opposite conclusions, despite the fact that the state regulations in question were virtually the same.

II. THE DECISION BELOW IS CONTRARY TO PRIOR DECISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT.

The district court misinterpreted Stapleton, in light of the Easterwood decision, by refusing to admit into evidence the state walkway regulation. The Third Circuit's affirmation of the district court, without opinion, ignores both Third Circuit and Supreme Court case law, as well as § 54a of FELA, all of which support a finding that the state safety regulation was applicable to the defendant, and as such was relevant and admissible.

A. The Third Circuit Erroneously Affirmed The Lower Court's Reliance On Stapleton.

The Supreme Court considered in Stapleton whether a railroad's violation of a state child labor law could be used to establish negligence per se in a claim arising under FELA. The Court noted that "The language of the [FELA] shows unmistakably that the basis of recovery is negligence and that without such negligence no right of action is given under this act." Id., at 589. The Court concluded that the application of a child labor statute to establish negligence per se in FELA actions would undermine Congress' intent that recovery under FELA be based on some finding of negligence, and that the state child labor law could not be used in a claim under FELA to impose negligence per se on the employer. Id., at 589-590.

The Court in Stapleton intended to limit the preemption of state statutes to those which eliminated the requirement of a finding of negligence. Claims brought under child labor statutes, like the one before the Supreme Court in Stapleton, are not grounded in negligence.

The state regulation offered by petitioner's counsel in the present case is distinguishable from the statute in Stapleton. Here a railroad safety regulation was promulgated to ensure that the walkway be kept in reasonably safe condition. 53 Pa. Code § 33.125(b). Its violation, if resulting in injury, is necessarily grounded in a finding of evidence.[4]

B. Established Third Circuit Case Law Permits The Admission Into Evidence Of Statutes Enacted For The Safety Of Employees.

Enactment of the FRSA changed the rules regarding the admissibility of state safety laws and regulations for purposes of the FELA. See supra, at 7. This change was consistent with the history and purpose of the FELA as a broad remedial statute that would meet the "changing conditions and changing concepts of the industry." The Supreme Court stated in Kernan v. American Dredging Co., 355 U.S. 426, 431 (1958) that,

> [I]nstead of a detailed statute codifying common-law principles, Congress saw fit to enact a statute of the most general terms, thus leaving in large measure to the courts the duty of fashioning remedies for injured employees in a manner analogous to the development of tort remedies at common law. But it was clear that the general congressional intent was to provide liberal recovery for injured workers (citation omitted), and it is also clear that Congress intended the creation of no static remedy, but one which would be developed and enlarged to meet changing > conditions and changing concepts of industry's duty toward its workers. (emphasis added).

---

[4] Subsequent Third Circuit case law supports petitioner's interpretation of the Stapleton decision. See Ries v. National Railroad Passenger Corp., 960 F.2d 1156, 1164 (3rd Cir. 1992), infra.

Id. at 432.

The Third Circuit, considering whether the violation of an OSHA regulation requiring safe stairways was negligence per se in a FELA claim, held that if a statutory violation "contributes in fact to the death or injury in suit, without regard to whether the injury flowing from the breach was the injury the statute sought to prevent." Ries v. National Railroad Passenger Corp., 960 F.2d 1156, 1159 (3rd Cir. 1992), citing Kernan v. American Dredging Co. The Ries court said that "It is well settled that the FELA requires a finding of negligence per se when there has been a violation of a safety statute specifically aimed at the railroad industry." Id. Although the Ries court ultimately declined to find that the railroad was negligent per se for violating the OSHA regulation, the court concluded that violation of OSHA standards were admissible to show evidence of negligence. Id., at 1164. Notably, the Third Circuit's refusal to find negligence per se was based on limiting language within OSHA itself, not a finding of preemption. Id., at 1160-62.[5] Pursuant to the Third Circuit's reasoning in Ries, the state safety regulation was admissible as evidence of negligence, and its exclusion constituted reversible error.[6] [5] See also, National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners v. Coleman, 542 F.2d 11 (3d Cir. 1976), supra, at 9.

---

[6] Failure to admit at trial a safety regulation for use as evidence of a standard of care is prejudicial error. Eckert v. Aliquippa & Southern R. Co., 828 F.2d 183 (3rd Cir. 1987); Rolick v. Collins Pine Co., 975 F.2d 1009, 1014 (3rd Cir. 1992) (trial court's failure to admit OSHA regulation as evidence of standard of care in federal diversity negligence action was prejudicial). Proof of violation of a safety statute in a FELA action carries independent significance beyond establishing another basis for recovery against the carrier. Section 53 of the FELA triggers a bar to the defense of contributory negligence where the defendant carrier is liable under a negligence per se theory. Foreclosing this opportunity is prejudicial error. Eckert, 828 F.2d at 186.

CONCLUSION

For all these reasons, petitioner respectfully requests that the Court accept this petition for certiorari.

Respectfully submitted,

EMIL R. DINARDO
JOSEPH DINARDO, P.C.
267 North Street
Buffalo, NY 14201-1396
(716) 883-2212

LAWRENCE M. MANN *
STEVEN M. WEISBAUM
ALPER & MANN, P.C.
400 N. Capitol Street, N.W.
Suite 851
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 298-9191

Counsel for Petitioner

* Counsel of Record

August 29, 1994

ADDENDUM

IN THE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE
WESTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

Civil Action No. 90-1639

JOHN L. MARSILIO,
Plaintiff,

vs.

CONSOLIDATED RAIL CORPORATION,
Defendant.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania
June 9, 1993 9:35 a.m.

TRANSCRIPT OF JURY TRIAL
BEFORE THE HONORABLE MAURICE COHILL
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

APPEARANCES:

For the Plaintiff:	Emil R. DiNardo, Esq.
For the Defendant:	Byrd R. Brown, Esq.
Court Reporter:	Jordan Lilienthal 1029 United States Courthouse Pittsburgh, PA 15219 (412) 281-8184

Proceedings recorded by mechanical stenography, transcript produced by notereading, to say. At any rate, the schedule will be, we will finish tomorrow hopefully. It is never chisled in stone. The lawyers think we will be able to finish it tomorrow, and Monday morning you will hear the final arguments of the lawyers and my charge to you on the law.

* * * *

So about the only real wrinkle is the fact we can't have court on Friday. Have a good lunch. We will see you a quarter of two.

(Court recessed for lunch.)

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON SESSION

June 9, 1993

(The following proceedings were had out of the presence of the jury:)

THE COURT: Good afternoon. Be seated.

Before the jury comes down, I would like to hear you tell me again why you think this should be admitted, Mr. DiNardo, this Section 30.125 of the Public Utility Commission Code.

MR. DINARDO: I believe that statute is promulgated for the safety of individuals, employees of the railroad, and that under the Eckert case, statutes or regulations that are promulgated for the safety of railroad employees are admissible and relevant.

THE COURT: Mr. Brown.

MR. BROWN: Under the Eckert case that relates to Federal statutes and federal regulations. The federal government has preempted the field of railroad safety and anything that the Public Utility Commission has promulgated is certainly no guide, has no standing and it has no effect.

THE COURT: I will deny the request. I am basing my decision on an old Supreme Court case, Chesapeake against Ohio Railroad Company—Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company against Stapelton, 279 U. S. 587, 1929. Here there was a child that was working for somebody—somebody under the age of 16 was working for the railroad and was injured, and they sued under the FELA, and the plaintiffs sought to bring in the state statute on child labor law.

The court said this. By the Federal Employers Liability Act, Congress took possession of the field of employers liability to employees and in interstate transportation by rail and all state laws upon that subject were superseded.

The rights and obligations of the petitioner—that would be the child—depend upon that act and applicable principles of common law as determined by the federal courts.

The employer is liable for injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence specified in the act, and proof of such negligence is essential to recovery. They were trying to say it was negligence per se since he was under the age of 16.

I think that clearly controls this situation, so we will deny the request.

(Whereupon, the jury entered and was duly seated.)

THE COURT: Good afternoon. Okay, Mr. DiNardo.

MR. DINARDO: The plaintiff will call Mr. Ron Kopriva.

RONALD KOPRIVA, called as a witness on behalf of the Plaintiff, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. DINARDO:

Q. Mr. Kopriva, would you please tell the jury where you are employed?

A. Conrail.

Q. How long have you been employed by the railroad?

A. 28 years.

Q. What is your date of hire?

A. 2-11-65.

Q. And your position in the railroad?

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

No. 93-3316

JOHN L. MARSILIO,
Appellant

v.

CONSOLIDATED RAIL CORPORATION

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA
(D.C. Civil No. 90-01639)
District Judge: Maurice B. Cohill, Jr.

Argued on March 28, 1994

Before: GREENBERG, COWEN and NYGAARD, Circuit Judges

JUDGMENT ORDER

After consideration of all contentions raised by appellant, it is ADJUDGED and ORDERED that the judgment of the district court entered June 14, 1993 be and is hereby AFFIRMED.

Costs taxed against appellant.

BY THE COURT

Circuit Judge
[Illegible]

Certified as a true copy and issued in lieu of a formal mandate on June 15, 1994.

Teste: P. Douglas Sisk
Clerk, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

Attest:

[Illegible]
Chief Deputy Clerk

Dated: Apr. 15, 1994

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

No. 93-3316

JOHN L. MARSILIO,
Appellant
v.
CONSOLIDATED RAIL CORPORATION

SUR PETITION FOR REHEARING

Present: SLOVITER, Chief Judge, BECKER, STAPLETON, MANSMANN, GREENBERG, HUTCHINSON, SCIRICA, COWEN, NYGAARD, ALITO, ROTH and LEWIS, Circuit Judges

The petition for rehearing filed by appellant in the above-entitled case having been submitted to the judges who participated in the decision of this court and to all the other available circuit judges of the circuit in regular active service, and no judge who concurred in the decision having asked for rehearing, and a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit in regular active service not having voted for rehearing by the court in banc, the petition for rehearing is denied.

BY THE COURT,

[Illigible]
Circuit Judge

Dated: May 31, 1994